POLICEMAN WHO SCORED IN COURT

Magistrate Breen Tells Finnen That Story He Tells Is "Impossible."

PRISONER GOES FREE.

Victim of Brutal Clubbing Will Take Case to Commissioner Bingham.

Finnen, who is a huge, burly, redelender prisoner and Horan's delicate looking friend, Edward Mernan, a bill clerk for Park & Tilford, had threat ened to beat him (Finnen), whereupon, Horan with his club, so that thirteen stitches had to be taken in his face.

Not only did Magistrate Breen again account of the assault and indorsed it as the true version. Horan's employers have taken the matter up with Deputy the proceedings before Magistrate Breen will be read by Gen. Bingham.

Weak from Loss of Blood. When arraigned yesterday Horan was so weak from shock and loss of blood that he could give only a faint outline of what happened. Nor was his friend Mernan in court to back up his story. Mernan said to-day that he and Horan had been dining in a restaurant until after midnight. They arrived at the vestibule of Horan's home a little before 1 o'clock As they were discussing something the were interested in they stepped inside the vestibule to finish their talk. It was very cold outside.

"We had been talking about two minutes," said Mernan, "when this policeman here came to the door and rapped on the window. Horan opened the door to let him in, whereupon he instantly attacked us. That is, he threw himself on Horan and struct hin in the face with his club. pounded him and pounded him with his club until I thought sure! he'd him, and, although badly frightened myself, I managed to get the club from him, and run up to the roof, where I threw it off into a back ward. I was too frightened to go back to Horan, so escaped to the street through another house and went home.

Second Policeman Arrives. Meanwhile Finnen continued to pound and maul the little automobile salesman. He was so engaged when Policeman Cockery arrived. "When the other policemen came," said Horan to-day, "this man Finnen stopped beating me. Cockery looked down at me and said: 'Say, Finnen, don't you think you'd better take this man to the hospital? He looks as if he'd need a doctor.'

"To hell with him and to hell with doctors, said this policeman. Then he added; 'To hell with a hospital; I'll finish him; I'll kill him!' He was fairly raging, Judge, and I think he'd have killed me if that other policeman hadn't come along and made him take me to Finnen then elaborated the story he had told yesterday.

He said that when he went to the hallway where Horan and Mernan were chatting the two men sprang upon him, saying, "Let's beat up this policeman." Then they pinioned my arms to my side and took my club away from me I did not strike this man. He might have been hit in the scuffle. Collar as Evidence.

Then the big policeman produced a collar, which he said had been torn from his neck by his two puny but desperate asailants. Magistrate Breen looked at the collar, and said: "That's an old collar that has been broken in wearing. None of these men here tore that collar. I'd be ashamed of myself to try and offer such evidence as that the case, Magistrate Breen said: "It is quite certain that the defendant Horan had a perfect right to be where he was, inasmuch as he lived in court." Then, as a final ruling in
